1. To improve the research ethics of this university's Ph.D. and Master's degree students, and to equip students with the correct knowledge of and attitude towards ethics when conducting academic research, this university has established these Guidelines for Implementation of Academic Research Ethics Education course (hereafter known as "this Course").
2. Starting from the 2015 school year, enrolled graduate students studying for master's or doctoral degree (including in-service master's program) must complete this course before the end of the first school year.
Those who have not passed are not eligible for the degree examination.
3. Students who are required to take this zerocredit course must conform to the course implementation standards announced by this university's Office of Academic Affairs (basically 2 hours or more of study).
4. Regulations for Master's and Ph.D. programs of each school, department, and program provide that students having passed professional academic research ethics education courses may be exempted from taking this Course.
5. These Guidelines shall be adopted by the Academic Affairs Council, and submitted to the President for approval before implementation. The same applies for any amendments and revisions.
